SUB ROSA

By VIRGINIA VANE

WAGE-EARNING DAUGHTER FAMILY VICTIM.

Dear Miss Vane: I have been working and helping to support my parents for years. Now I want to get married and wish to save some of my salary for trousseau things, etc. My parents seem to feel I ought to pay for everything. I have four brothers, all working, one of them earns a very good salary—the others, modest salaries but sufficient. They give practically nothing to the house and they get away with it. My father has been out of work seven months and I have bought nearly everything for the house, while the boys let me do it. My fiancé objects strongly to these conditions of officers of the new group will take place at a later meeting of the council.

Go right ahead buying your trousseau things, and using your money to help yourself for once. When the family discover that there isn't any more of your money to be lived on, it will occur to them that someone else's money is just as good.

Just why the daughter of the house should get thus taken advantage of, is difficult to understand, but you'll see a dozen households where the wage-earning daughter is the goat, to every one home where the son and heir bears the full brunt of financial responsibility. Mothers and fathers very often believe that it's a girl's duty to stick to her people and help through everything, while of a son they demand only that he shall live at home as much as possible, and contribute only barest pittance to their income. If you, Kay, have gone on far submitting to this sort of treatment for years, your family have managed to get into the habit of demanding more and more of you. They probably long since ceased to appreciate what you've done for them. And your sudden change of attitude may shock them into realizing you're a human being with as much a right to the pursuit of happiness as your four brothers who are content to let you bear all the burden of responsibility.

So make up your mind to try yourself right this time. You serve some fun with your own money and there are plenty of outlets to take up the job where you left it.

WORRIED: Perhaps this is a case where it wouldn't do any harm to give your husband a good scare. It doesn't sound thoroughly lost to yet. He's merely started running around with the wrong crowd, and he's too weak to resist their influence. You, unfortunately, have suffered the results of that influence and it's breaking up your home.

It hasn't occurred to him just what he's doing. He goes out, he has a good time with the boys, it comes home with a vague feeling of guilt to a wife who used to be ways cheerful and pleasant, but now seems to have a permanent frown. He doesn't figure it all out. He just accepts the new kind of wife with some philosophy and continues to have a good time with it.

It might be in the nature of surprise to him if you left him a little while. You can go home to your mother or go away for a while leaving him to figure out whether there wild parties of his are worth the disruption of his home. Noting will bring home to him quite clearly what a fool he's making himself for nothing, as your abrupt departure.

ONE NEEDING ADVICE: If you will send stamped addressed envelope for personal reply, it will be easier to answer. There are a number of good books on the subject on which you seek knowledge and such information as they contain would be useful, practical and absolutely accurate—much better than any advice handed out by friend or neighbor.
