FARM EDUCATION GROUP SELECTED

COMMITTEE TO ACQUAINT FARMERS WITH NEW FEATURES OF 1940 PROGRAM.

In order that farm owners and operators in Clay county may have more prompt and complete information about the 1940 farm program, appointment of a county educational committee was announced today by Art Berg, chairman of the Clay County Agricultural Conservation association.

The committee includes Arthur Hansen, Ulster; Edwin L. Olson, Lake Park; Margaret Opp, Moorhead, county home demonstration agent, and Donald A. Peet, Moorhead, county agent.

The new committee will conduct discussion meetings to acquaint farmers with new features of the program as in previous years. "But we feel," says Berg, "that there also is an added obligation to show village people and all consumers how the agricultural programs protect them against violent fluctuations in food prices."

New features of the 1940 program include an allowance of $30 for every farm, to be earned by tree planting, and some changes in the size of payments for soil-building practices, such as new seedlings. The grouping or classification of crops into depleting and non-depleting types remains about the same as last year, Berg explained.

Best Known In U. S. And yet it was, at one time, probably the best-known picture in the entire United States.

It shows Lincoln reading the emancipation proclamation to his cabinet for the first time. With him are the seven members of his cabinet, grouped so that the two "radicals" in the cabinet, Secretary of the Treasury, are standing closest to the president. This the artist did to emphasize the radical step the president was taking in freeing the slaves. Seward, secretary of state, is shown objecting to a phrase in the document.

Too Honest, Too Faithful. It is said the artist who painted the picture met Lincoln for the first time in the White House, shaking his hand, said "Do you think you could paint a handsome picture of me?" The artist, says the story "was too honest to say yes and too tactful to say no."

He asked for a conference with the president and persuaded him to let the historic picture of his freeing of the slaves be painted. For six months the artist lived in the White House, sitting at the president's side even during confidential conversations—for when a visitor would see a stranger present and hesitate, Lincoln would say "Don't mind him—he's just a painter."

Paid To See It. When the picture was finished it toured the country, people paying admission to see it. It was praised for its faithful reproduction of an event that some characterized as "one of the most important steps in the history of the world, ranking with the signing of the Magna Chart itself."

Hundreds of reproductions of the painting were engraved and sold from 1866 on. An entire book about the painting was printed in 1867.

But for 14 years the United States refused to buy the original painting—because one of the men in the picture was shown wearing a light pair of pants!

Seward No Fop. To make the light and dark masses in the picture balance, the artist had painted Secretary of State Seward as wearing a dark coat and light trousers. Seward declared that only a fop would wear mismatched coat and trousers, and he was so angry he'd go down in history as a fop.

Then the picture disappeared from the country. It reappeared in 1920, when Herbert Hoover came to the White House. With him he brought an engraving that years before he had purchased in a second hand shop in San Francisco. Since then it had followed him to Tokyo, St. Petersburg, Mandalay and London.

Scene Is Located. And as Hoover hung it over a fireplace in the White House he noticed suddenly that the fireplace was duplicated exactly by the fireplace shown in the picture. The meticulous detail of the picture enabled him to check the windows and doorways until he was certain that it was the very room in which the picture had been painted more than 60 years before.

Ransacking the attic and the servants' quarters, he found two of the chairs that appeared in the picture—and further search found another one in the department of state. Before long the entire room had been reconstructed.

Judge Read Story. A newspaper man heard about Hoover's experience and wrote about it. Along with thousands of Americans, Judge Byron R. Wilson in Moorhead read the story—learned that of the thousands of engravings that once adorned Victorian living rooms, only a few were believed to exist.

It happened to be a Sunday and Judge Wilson that same day called upon an aunt of his, whose hobby was painting. He mentioned the article and she asked "I suppose you'd like to have one of those engravings?" Judge Wilson agreed, remarking that it would be a mighty hard job to uncover one.

"I don't think so," she said. "If you'll look in that closet over there, you'll find one I'll be glad to give to you."

So he did and she did and today it hangs above his desk in the Clay county courthouse.

Storied Picture Hangs In Chambers Of Judge

Congress Refused To Buy Original Of Engraving Showing Reading Of Emancipation Proclamation Because Seward Had On Light-Colored Trousers.

By CRANE ROSENBAUM Over the desk of Judge Byron R. Wilson hangs an engraving. It is a reproduction of a painting that the Congress of the United States refused to buy for 14 years because a man in it had on a pair of light-colored trousers.

About two by three feet, there's nothing to distinguish it from the thousands of engravings that filled American living rooms when Victoria was on the throne of England, and her tastes dictated the art, architecture and styles of the English-speaking races.

CARD OF THANKS.

Deeply grateful and appreciative of the kindnesses shown me by friends and neighbors in my recent sad bereavement, I hereby tender my heartfelt thanks to one and all. The assistance rendered during my wife's illness, the contributions of flowers and memorials, the singing of Mrs. Harrisville, the music by Sister Della Dahl, and the consoling words of Rev. Harrisville, all contributed to a lightening of our burden of sorrow.
